

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Caroline Atkinson is an Aboriginal woman from the Jiman people of Queensland who is based in northern New South Wales (Australia) and currently works as a private consultant for We Al-li, an Aboriginal family-owned business that focuses on trauma and trauma recovery from post-colonial impacts. Her PhD focused on Aboriginal male violence and its relationship to generational post-traumatic stress. <carlie@live.com.au>

Linda Briskman is Professor of Human Rights at the Institute for Social Research at Swinburne University. Her research interests focus on immigration detention and she is co-author of the 2008 award-winning Human Rights Overboard: Seeking asylum in Australia. <lbriskman@swin.edu.au>

R. Tina Catania is a PhD student in Geography and Women's and Gender Studies at Syracuse University. Her research focuses on Immigration to Italy and the European Union. <rtcatani@syr.edu>

Peter Chambers works on the borders of politics at the University of Melbourne. His work explores border security and governance as power in transformation and is seeking to connect issues of 'offshore' security practice to the enclaves, devices and assemblies of 'onshore' mobile publics in twenty-first century cities. <pcch@unimelb.edu.au>

Kate Coddington is a PhD candidate in the Department of Geography at Syracuse University. She studies political geography, specifically addressing policies directed at asylum seeker and Aboriginal populations in Australia. She has conducted research in Alaska, Australia, and Indonesia. <kcodding@maxwell.syr.edu>

Azadeh Dastyari is an Assistant Lecturer in the Faculty of Law at Monash University and an Associate of the Castan Centre for Human Rights Law. She is currently researching the legality of extraterritorial refugee status determination and detention by the United States. <azadeh.dastyari@monash.edu.au>

Michelle Dimasi is a PhD student at Swinburne University and is writing her thesis on Australia's asylum seeker policy. She has lived on Christmas Island and has worked extensively with asylum seekers in Australia and internationally. <mdimasi@swin.edu.au>

Libby Effeney is a PhD candidate at the Centre for Citizenship and Globalization at Deakin University. She conducts interdisciplinary research focused on migration and cultural diversity. <l.effeney@deakin.edu.au>

Heidrun Friese is at Goethe-University Frankfurt and the Centre for Mediterranean Studies at Ruhr-University in Bochum. Her research interests focus on social and political theory, (cultural) identities; time, history and memory; concepts of space, borders and transnationalism; undocumented migration; friendship and hospitality. <heidrun.friese@rub.de>

Lucy Fiske works at the Centre for Human Rights Education at Curtin University and is a Visiting Scholar at the Centre for Peace and Conflict Studies at Sydney University. Her main areas of research include forced migration and political activism. <l.fiske@curtin.edu.au>

Jenna M. Loyd is a writer and researcher based in Syracuse, New York. She is co-editor with Matt Mitchelson and Andrew Burrige of an anthology entitled Beyond Walls and Cages: Prisons, Borders, and Global Crisis (2012). <jloyd@maxwell.syr.edu>

Emily Mitchell-Eaton is a PhD student in Geography at Syracuse University. Her research centres on migration, citizenship and U.S. neocolonialism. She has an MPA from Syracuse University and a BA in Portuguese and Latin American Studies from Smith College. <emmitche@syr.edu>

Philip Hayward is Deputy Pro Vice Chancellor (Research) at Southern Cross University, Lismore (Australia), editor of Shima: The International Journal of Research into Island Cultures and international network convenor of SICRI: The Small Island Cultures Research Initiative. <phayward2010@gmail.com>

Alison Mountz is Associate Professor and Canada Research Chair in Global Migration at the Balsillie School of International Affairs and Geography at Wilfrid Laurier University. She researches migration, border enforcement, detention, and asylum and runs the Island Detention Project. <amountz@wlu.ca>

Joshua Nash is a research associate in linguistics at the University of Adelaide, where he completed his PhD in 2011. His research synthesises ecological approaches to the study of language with Indian perspectives on spirituality, ecology, and ethnography. He has conducted fieldwork on Norfolk Island since 2007. <Joshua.nash@adelaide.edu.au>

Amy Nethery lectures in Politics and Policy Studies at Deakin University and researches migration policy in Australia and Asia. Her PhD thesis entitled Immigration Detention in Australia was awarded the Isi Leibler prize for promoting understanding of racism in Australia. <amy.nethery@deakin.edu.au>