

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

David Barrowclough is a tutor and fellow in archaeology at Wolfson College, University of Cambridge, and is joint editor of the Proceedings of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society. He has written widely on the subjects of archaeology and landscape history and has a particular interest in landscape and ritual. <dab32@cam.ac.uk>

Ina Berg is a lecturer in Mediterranean archaeology at the University of Manchester. Her research focuses on issues around cultural interaction, ceramic studies and the archaeology of islands. <ina.berg@manchester.ac.uk>

Helen Dawson is senior archaeologist at the Museum of London and Honorary Research Fellow in Classical and Archaeological Studies at the University of Kent, where she has been lecturing in Aegean prehistory since 2006. Her interests are in Island Archaeology and Mediterranean Prehistory. <helen.dawson@uclmail.net>

Paul Driscoll is undertaking a PhD in the Department of Archaeology and Anthropology, University of Bristol, where his research is focused on the Channel Islands in the Atlantic Bronze Age. <paul.driscoll@bris.ac.uk>

Reuben Grima is the senior curator responsible for prehistoric sites at Heritage Malta. His research interests include the landscape context of Malta's Late Neolithic monuments, and the creation of archaeological narratives that are accessible to wider audiences. <reuben.grima@gov.mt>

Margarita Nazou is a PhD candidate at the Institute of Archaeology, University College London. Her current research focuses on Final Neolithic and Early Bronze Age pottery styles in Attica and the surrounding islands (Greece). <m.nazou@ucl.ac.uk>

Aleks Pluskowski is a lecturer in medieval archaeology at the Department of Archaeology, University of Reading. His research, rooted in zooarchaeology, focuses on the relationship between culture and ecology in medieval Europe, particularly the environmental dimensions of crusading, colonisation and religious conversion in frontier regions. <a.g.pluskowski@reading.ac.uk>

Rebecca Rennell undertook PhD research at the Institute of Archaeology, University College London and is a member of Uist Archaeology. <becky@uistarchaeology.com>

Krish Seetah is a native of Mauritius, residing in the United Kingdom. He is a zooarchaeologist with interests in colonialism and colonisation and is currently a Leverhulme Research Associate working at the McDonald Institute for Archaeological Research, Department of Archaeology, Cambridge. <ks354@cam.ac.uk>

Tony Whincup is Head of the School of Visual and Material Culture in the College of Creative Arts, Massey University, New Zealand. In 2008 he was awarded the Kiribati Order of Merit for services to the country. His most recent book, Bwai ni Kiribati, Artefacts of Experience, focuses on the material culture of Kiribati. <A.N.Whincup@massey.ac.nz>