

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Vedat Çaliskan is an assistant professor in the Department of Geography at the University of Canakkale Onsekiz Mart and lectures on tourism and economic geography. He has a PhD in Human and Economic Geography from the University of Istanbul and research interests in festival and fair tourism. <v.caliskan@comu.edu.tr>

Kevin Colls is a Project Manager for Birmingham Archaeology based at the University of Birmingham. He has directed a wide variety of large archaeological projects worldwide and is completing a PhD on the archaeology of the Western Isles of Scotland. <k.s.colls@bham.ac.uk>

Valentina Copat has a PhD in Prehistoric Archaeology from the Sapienza University of Rome and she has been collaborating in a research project on the prehistoric site at Tas-Silg (Malta). <valecopat@fastwebnet.it>

Michela Danesi is a PhD student in Prehistoric Archaeology at the Sapienza University of Rome. Her research project focuses on Maltese Late Neolithic pottery. <michelindia@hotmail.com>

Stephen Foster is an Associate Professor in Creative Studies at the University of British Columbia, Okanagan. He is a video and electronic media artist of mixed Haida and European background whose work deals with issues of indigenous representation in popular culture through personal narrative and documentary. <stephen.foster@ubc.ca>

John Hunter is Professor of Ancient History and Archaeology at the University of Birmingham. He has been undertaking survey and excavation in the Northern and Western Isles for over 30 years. <j.r.hunter@bham.ac.uk>

Andrew Jennings is a post-doctoral research associate in the newly established Center for Nordic Studies in the University of Highlands and Islands Millennium Institute in Scotland. He is based in Shetland. <scotgene@aol.com>

Rob Snyder is the Executive Vice President of the Island Institute in Rockland, Maine, USA. He works with island and remote coastal leaders to identify innovative approaches to community sustainability. <rsnyder@islandinstitute.org>

Giulia Recchia is a researcher at the University of Foggia, specialising in Mediterranean prehistory. Her current research projects are in Southern Italy and Malta. <g.recchia@unifg.it>